

London

City Blue Print

Quick Overview

Overall Score: 53.4 out of 100 – New York had the top score of 62.9 – still a giant opportunity for improvement

Overall Rank: 3 out of 50

On the dimensions measured, London does particularly well on policies that support women’s access and use of technology for women entrepreneur’s. It also does well not only because of its large market size but because of its equality of access to the market:

- ✓ Notably one of the few cities to collect technology use by gender
- ✓ Percent of women who use the internet
- ✓ Percent of women with smartphones
- ✓ % of company boardmembers that are women
- ✓ Accelerators with women owned businesses
- ✓ It is also the top city for potential investors (high net worth individuals)

Other Areas to Improve

Of London’s 15 lowest scores, only 9 are below the median score. For those that are below the median, the % of major city business associations headed by female leaders stands out as being far below the median score.

Lowest 15 Indicators

London's traditional business networks and educational pathways have historically been dominated by men, but these are rapidly becoming more equal.

London's traditional business networks and tech-oriented educational pathways have long been dominated by men, and this has translated into differences in commercial outcomes. Only 21% of the UK STEM workforce is comprised of women, and only 16% of women study a STEM subject to degree level. UK angel investors are 86% men, as are ten of twelve directors of the London Chamber of Commerce and Industry.

This disparity translates into commercial outcomes: 93% of patents held in the UK are held by men, and men are twice as likely as women to be entrepreneurs. Men are 56% more likely to secure angel investment than women, and 86% of all publicly announced venture capital investments in 2016 went to firms with exclusively male founders.

New networks dedicated to supporting female entrepreneurs are rapidly emerging in London, and are poised to disrupt this trend. Hatch Enterprises has supported over 100 female entrepreneurs since 2014, a programme similar to that run by Incito Ventures. Allbright, an organisation dedicated to female entrepreneurs, has an accelerator programme and a fund dedicated to investing in female-founded start-ups, along with a female-only coworking space; similar spaces have recently been launched by Blooms, We Heart Mondays, and Grace Belgravia.

Recent Positive Steps:

- ✓ New accelerators have recently been launched to support female entrepreneurs in the UK.
- ✓ The Mayor's International Business Programme led a trip bringing 15 women-led technology startups to the west coast of the United States in an effort to help them scale globally.
- ✓ Several women-only coworking spaces have been launched, enabling women to network, collaborate, and grow their businesses in a female-led environment.

With more women than men caring for children in London, challenges in achieving a successful work-life balance is a significant barrier to female entrepreneurship.

The burden of childcare falls largely upon women in the UK, with women providing 74% of the childcare within the average household. With 80% of UK women becoming mothers at some point in their lives, achieving a harmonious work-life balance is a significant challenge for female entrepreneurs. In one survey, 40% of respondents cited work and family commitments as the biggest challenge to starting an enterprise, while 56% suggested that maintaining it was the biggest challenge to the business' ongoing management.

In the same study, 56% of women cited their lack of marketing expertise as a major barrier to launching a business, while 60% cited a need for business strategy skills. The obligations attending childcare limit women's abilities to access the educational programmes needed to remedy these perceived weaknesses, which are often held in child-unfriendly environments.

Women-led groups have begun to launch ventures to change this trend, however. Campus for Mums presents a 10-week start-up programme to support mothers launching their own businesses, and Kitchen Table, launched in early 2018, enables members to host and join female-only co-working groups out of private homes.

Recent Positive Steps:

- ✓ Educational development programs for women entrepreneurs have tailored themselves to new mothers.
- ✓ Recently-launched female-only co-working spaces have enabled women with some responsibility for childcare to work in productive environments.
- ✓ London's highly flexible 52 week statutory maternity leave enables new mothers to build a business by using their savings, while guaranteeing their income levels in the post-natal period.

London should build upon its strong track record in supporting female entrepreneurs by facilitating women-led organizations.

- CULTURE: Further policies that improve work/life balance, and a commitment to encourage employees to take advantage of those policies, would help women take on leadership roles.
- TALENT: Promoting female representation on the boards of industry groups would provide role models for young entrepreneurs.
- TECHNOLOGY: Providing grants to develop more female-led co-working spaces would facilitate networking and business development in a traditionally male-dominated business environment.
- TALENT: Promoting networks bringing together female-elected officials, public sector leaders, and entrepreneurs to build new female-led policy networks would change the economic policy environment.
- MARKETS: Providing incentives for female students to pursue STEM subjects at the GCSE and degree level would work to level the technical knowledge gap in future.
